Evidence Not Conclusive.

The piece of metal reached the Amerian embassy in London through the British admiralty, and there were affidavits declaring that the metal was picked up on the deck of the vessel soon after the explosion occurred. However, an examination of these affidavits following the decision of the United States naval experts has failed to disclose one made by the person who actually picked it up on the deck of the ill-fated vessel.

The view of the apparent lack of positive evidence that the piece of metal in question was actually picked up on the vessel, Secretary Lansing said that the incident was a closed one. However, there is a possibility that the decision of the American naval officers will be sent to the Berlin government as a matter of information only, the German government having declared, following the disaster, that there were no German submarines in the vicinity at the time and suggesting that the sinking of the Hesperian might be due to a mine.

Unable to Sustain Case.

While there seems to be little doubt that the fragment is a piece of metal from a German torpedo, the lack of positive evidence or a sworn statement from the person who picked up the metal to indicate that it came from the Hesperian's deck will close the case for this government. This lack of ositive evidence really takes away any case which the American govern-The Shade Shop, 12th and II sts.

Slag Roof Stands Severe Test

Read the Following News Story, Reprinted From The Star, Concerning Roof Materials:

Realty Man Tells How Various Materials Withstood New Orleans Storm.

Commenting on the damage done to roofs by the severe windstorm that recently swept over New Orleans, Charles Roth, member of the New Orleans real estate board, declared that all new slate roofs and those constructper cent of damage. A great many of these buildings, Mr. Roth stated, should have had ed within a few years, and slate roofs which had a very steep pitch were not badly damaged, says the New Orleans Times-Picayune. Old slate roofs, especially in the older part of the city, Mr. Roth said, suffered most. A great many of them had been repaired recently, and were, of course, inherently weak, and naturally succumbed to the storm, showing from 50 to 100 new roofs a long time ago. Commenting on metal roofs, Mr. Roth said they were an easy mark. Once the wind got under them it rolled them up and twisted them into all sorts of shapes.

Made Good Showing.

Tile roofs, where properly put on and protected with an underroof of felt, Mr. Roth said, showed remarkable staying powers. In cases where tiles were af-fected by debris, various articles and falling chimneys the roofs were still protected by underroofing of felt. On roofs where the tiles were provided with no underroofing it seemed the tiles were damaged in greater degree. On the whole, said Mr. Roth, tile roofs stood the test almost perfectly, and many a tile roof remained intact.

Composition roofs, especially five-ply tar composition, covered with shells or gravel, Mr. Roth said, he believed showed the best resisting powers. The damage to such roofs, except in cases where the roofs were extremely old or neglected, was very small.

The rain subsequent to the storm did enormous damage to the plaster, interior decorations, flooring, etc. Temporary repairs to slate roofs present the greatgrew out of the necessity for having a slope to run the water into cisterns, before the present water supply was obtained. Slates they afforded the cleanest and most healthful roof for the water to collect from. There are. however, tile roofs in the city more than 100 years old.

Favors Flat Roofs.

Mr. Roth said that he believed that the best roof is going to be made by composition roofing on a flat-topped building, and that the peaked roofs will eventually become fewer and fewer. He said he believed these flat ones the cheapest and best roofs, and he thought it might be a good plan to take the peaked roof off the damaged brick buildings in the old parts of the city and make flat roofs. One advantage of flat roofs with tarred or composition material is that they are easy to repair, and any one may go on such a roof with paper and bucket of tar and mend a break readily. However, Mr. Roth said, he did not favor some of the composition roof materials in a hot climate, especially if they are put on a sloping roof.
